I strongly urge you and your office to strengthen, rather than weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. The current guidelines have not been successful in doing what they were intended to do: stop overfishing, rebuild overfished stocks, minimize bycatch and protect essential fish habitat.

In order to both help fisheries, which are near commercial extinction, and restore and preserve our oceans, please see that the protection of fish habitat be increased.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Fish are a recommended food source with essential vitamins and oils for good health. Yet, even as these food sources are recommended by nutritionists, many of the fish and shrimp, etc. are in danger of extinction. They are being overfished to the extent that they may become extinct before they can be listed as an endangered species.

Please protect our oceans with wise fishing guidelines so that we may continue to enjoy these tasty and nutritious food sources.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to repudiate any attempts at weakening existing guidelines to protect our oceans and their vast array of species.

Recent studies point out that stocks of many species are 40% to 80% depleted, depending on the species. These studies point out a need for MORE protection of habitat for all life stages of ocean species, and MORE effective, science-based regulation of commercial and recreational fishing, not less.

I am appalled at the Bush administration's rejection of science-based management policy on many topics. I must emphatically state that there is no more room for bowing to those who connive for short-term economic gain at the expense of the sustainability and long-term health of our ocean ecosystems that comprise our national "commons."

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I urge you to strengthen them instead by proposing laws that limit fishing, and impose stiff penalties on habitat destruction. As you know, all life depends on water, but maybe more education to the general public on eco-systems might assist convincing people that the oceans are worth protecting.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Off every U.S. coast, our oceans are threatened by overfishing, pollution, offshore drilling, climate change, cruise ships, and more. Of the myriad threats to our oceans, one of the most serious is rampant overfishing.

As industrialized commercial fishing replaced subsistence harvests around the world, overfishing has steadily worsened. High-tech fishing fleets have become so efficient that some fish populations have disappeared within just a few years. A May 2003 study published in Nature magazine found that in the absence of sound management, populations of large predatory ocean fish have declined by 90 percent since the introduction of commercial fishing.

In addition, in its 2003 report to Congress evaluating the status of US fisheries, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) found that 97 fish stocks—41 percent of all federally managed fisheries—are in jeopardy. This is an increase from previous years, indicating that current management plans have been unable to stabilize fisheries, let alone improve them.

Harvesting too many fish too quickly is at the heart of the overfishing problem, but it is exacerbated by the use of indiscriminant, destructive fishing gear. Scientists estimate that fishermen discard 2.3 billion pounds of unintentionally-caught species every year—about a quarter of their total take.

I repeat, I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Sincerely,

It is time to put the environment first, and tell the special interests money grubbers that they have no more say in the matter. I live in Hawaii and the ocean is important to me. I want it to remain beautiful and teeming with life, but it is getting raped all the time by pollution. People in California can't even swim in the Pacific unprotected most of the time. Species are dying out, migrating to new areas, and many areas are being overfished. Debeers diamond corporation is dredging the ocean floor, destroying eco-systems in the process, all for something sparkly. It has got to stop.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

I am saddened by the recent reports from NOAA on the health of our oceans, particularly the coastal waters of the United States.

Until a future concerted plan is developed to manage and improve the condition of our oceans, I believe we need to keep existing guidelines in place instead of weakening them. The United States' multi-billion dollar fishing industry depends on the health of fish populations, and certainly these guidelines and other similar policies will be needed if we are to improve the status of our oceans.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

All life on earth is interdependent, and dependent upon an intact environment. Ocean habitats, which include coral, sea grasses, sandy bottoms and rocks, all provide fish with the food, shelter, spawning areas and nursing grounds that are essential to their continued survival.

But our oceans no longer sustain as much life as they used to. Overfishing, habitat destruction, and poor management have all led to an alarming decline in the health of our oceans and, in turn, in the health of human beings who consume fish and seafoods--once one of the healthiest foods known.

Currently, under the Magnuson-Stevens Act, essential fish habitat is protected under federal law. I am alarmed that the National Marine Fisheries Service is currently considering making changes to the existing protections which would jeopardize vital resources.

Predictably, special interests are working to convince the Bush administration to weaken existing ocean protections. As forceful as these interests are, they must not be allowed to prevail.

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Oceans connect everyone in the world through weather and water supply. No matter how far inland or high in elevation, the ocean effects each of us. Please do not turn your back on this imperative, shared resource.

I think the health of the related fisheries should be on the label or posted wherever fish are sold (markets and restaurants). A simple Grading scale A-D (assuming we would never allow harvesting a failing fishery - or would we?) would help inform consumers of the impact of their decisions.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. As you well know, the sea is a resource that no one can afford to lose to neglect or abuse. These guidelines (Magnuson- Stevens Act) should be considered by all who give and receive from the world's source of life. Thank you very much for reading and considering this letter.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

I am very concerned about the poor state of our oceans, so I hope you'll take the opportunity to protect them when you are asked to comment on a draft report from the U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy. The final version of this report will shape a comprehensive policy for restoring the health of our threatened oceans. Please carefully review this draft and suggest that the Ocean Commission's final report to the President and Congress includes strong measures to protect our oceans.

Specifically, I encourage you to suggest these prescriptions for better ocean health:

- Protect fragile ocean habitats through the use of protected areas and other tools;
- Transform failing fisheries into sustainable ones to guarantee safe and abundant seafood;
- Reduce dead zones by curbing polluted runoff that creates lack of oxygen and kills marine life;
- Enforce conservation laws to protect ocean wildlife and essential ecosystems;
- Protect our shores from oil by maintaining a moratorium on offshore oil and gas drilling;
- Explore ocean ecosystems by doubling federal investment in ocean science, exploration and education over the next 5 years;
- Reform ocean management by coordinating the hodgepodge of laws and agencies responsible for ocean protection;
- Enact adequate safeguards on aquaculture sites to protect marine ecosystems.

If you have already taken action on behalf of the oceans and/or commented before the draft review came out, thank you!

I am deeply invested in the well-being of our oceans. A healthy marine environment is important to our economy, and gives my family, my friends and me a place to relax and have fun. Please help ensure the Ocean Commission's report protects our state by including the strongest possible protections for our nation's oceans and marine life.

Sincerely,
Maura Moran

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

The best scientists in the US and abroad, including many Nobel prize winners tell us that the loss of biodiversity is the greatest threat we face. The oceans harbor much of the life on our planet. For this reason, they must be protected from overfishing, the catch of non-target species and habitat destruction.

Your leadership in this matter is very important. Let your descendents be proud of your legacy. We are all counting on you.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

With the great increase in maritime shipping traffic due to advent of container ships, and the accompanying pollution and transmigration of harmful non-native species; like the aquatic plant that is ruining the ecology of the Mediterranean, we need to rethink our use and treatment of our Oceans as habitat, instead of an inert medium of Commerce.

For decades the Japanese and others have utilized ruinous fishing methods, that needlessly destroy species whose corpses are thrown back into the ocean as waste, and the damage caused by these these harmful practices is multiplied by the fact that they and others, habitually and continually exceed the limits that they have agreed to with International regulating bodies.

The increasing encroachment of oil production facilities at or in the seas/oceans is portrayed by the oil companies as promoting aquatic health. If you would go to the shores of Prudhomme Bay, as a team did for PBS, you would find, by turning over rocks on the beaches, that they conceal a thick black residue of viscous crude oil, ten years after the EXXON Valdez spill and "cleanup".

Did I mention the death of coral reefs, worldwide, and the Zebra mussel in the Great lakes?

Please consider the fact, that with the continuing population growth, water is already at a critical point. Unless we want to save ourselves the trouble and expense of going to Mars by creating its lifeless duplicate here, we need to act

Sincerely,

Glen Binkley

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Fisheries everywhere are in deep decline and, for some it may too late... the damage from greed cannot be undone. As someone who lives in Oregon, I have spent much time on the Pacific coast and have seen firsthand the desolation and despair in once thriving fishing towns and villages along our coast. Everywhere, fishermen and their families tell the same story; their way of life has changed forever. Not so long ago they would go out in their boats and return with a good day's catch ensuring their familie's livelihood. Now they could fish from dawn to dusk and hardly catch anything.

It is essential that we strengthen the laws to protect our oceans and the coastal towns that depend upon them before nothing is left but a big pool of water devoid of any life.

Please do not give in to the wishes of corporate abusers of our natural resources who only care about reporting profits to their shareholders and damn the consequences of their greedy and shortsighted actions.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Specifically, I hope you will resist pressure to weaken the Magnuson-Stevens Act -- a vital tool in protecting marine habitat. Furthermore, I urge you to take steps to strengthen the conservation provisions of the Act by giving greater consideration to ecosystem impacts when establishing fish catch levels, eliminating overfishing of all species, and ending bottom trawling.

The oceans represent an important and unique source of healthy and nutritious food in addition to their innate value as a diverse ecosystem. Let's make sure we protect and sustain the oceans and their bounty for generations to come.

Thank you for your consideration on this issue.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. Clearly there is scientific data and growing concern to support protecting our oceans as indicated in the following excerpt from the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, April 21, 2004.

"The U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy, the first federal commission on oceans in 35 years, released a 400-page report calling on President Bush and Congress to pass legislation establishing a national policy that balances economic development of oceans and coasts with the need to protect ecosystems verging on collapse.

"Our oceans and coasts are in trouble," said retired Adm. James Watkins, the commission's chairman. "We as a nation have a historic opportunity to make a positive and lasting change in the way we manage them before it's too late." The federal commission, which spent three years working on the report and heard testimony from 440 scientists and other experts, recommended that ocean territories be managed based on ecosystems, which cross political boundaries. One of the commission's chief criticisms of current ocean management is that it tackles issues crisis by crisis with no overarching plan. Responsibility for ocean policy is divided among 14 federal agencies, and dozens of state and local agencies make decisions that directly affect coastal areas".

Please help protect our oceans as for future generations.

Sincerely,
Pat Olson

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. Why oh why would we want to weaken the protective laws? For what? For some environmentally non-caring company to get away with more? Make more money? Destroy more of our environment?

It makes no sense to weaken ANY environmental laws or protections, in fact the opposite is true.

Please do not allow the current money obsessed (their own personal fortunes, not America's) administration to destroy what we've been working so hard to preserve.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I have talked to many people who are Divers who say the fish that used to inhabit many areas are no longer there or in much smaller numbers. Large mature fish are disappearing at an alarming rate. We need stronger guidelines for it appears the ones we have now are not working.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

Already our planetary supply of fish has been badly depleted thanks to overfishing by the U.S., Japan and other nations. If we don't do something to STRENGTHEN our fishing laws and regulations then we'll all be eating nothing but soybeans 20 years from now. Not only are we risking our human future, but an entire ecosystem which is now at the mercy of greedy fishing industries looking to turn an even larger profit.

Think about the future generations of humans - your children's children. A bit more restraint now will ensure a healthier future for all of us.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

I have a student here at the University of Minnesota who has informed me of the damage over fishing has done and the way trawlers have put many coastal fisherman out of business.

The effects of this will be felt not only in the present time but in years to come. The student who is studying this understands. I am afraid that the majority of Americans and young men and women his age, especially, have no idea what we are in for, in the future, if we don't respect our planet now.

I know that certain special interests are working to get the Bush administration to weaken ocean protections. For the good of humanity and the planet, this cannot be allowed to happen.

I urge you to stand firm in opposition to this effort. Essential fish habitat must be protected in order to ensure healthy fish populations to continue and grow. Our oceans must be protected against the increasing assaults of over-fishing, habitat destruction and poor management.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

The oceans are a whole different world than the land-lubber human world. We have no right to destroy their ecosystems and kill the inhabitants for our greed. Human population is out of control, more fish are consumed by more people as a result. This does NOT constitute a good excuse to harvest even more (often in devastating ways) from the already stressed oceans. Money can not replace the diversity and delicate balance that are being upset.

I believe it is imperative to protect our oceans and essential fish habitat, no exceptions.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

Ocean habitats, which include coral, sea grasses, sandy bottoms and rocks, all provide fish with the food, shelter, spawning areas and nursing grounds that are essential to their continued survival. However, our oceans no longer sustain as much life as they used to. Overfishing, habitat destruction, and poor management have all led to an alarming decline in the health of our oceans. To preserve our oceans and ensure their sustainability, we need stringent regulations on fisheries management and habitat destruction. Therefore, I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

We once thought our oceans were an inexhaustible resource, but now we know our oceans are declining at an alarming rate.

Coral reefs are dying, polluted runoffs are ruining coastal waters & killing off marine life. Whole marine ecosystems have been destroyed, or are in danger of being destroyed, by offshore oil drilling.

We need a much better management system to reverse the decline in the health of our oceans.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. We all know how vital our oceans are to climate, shorelines, and the overall health of the planet's environment. Please take a strong position opposing further damage to the vitality of our oceans by permissive governments allowing greedy business people to overreach their right to enhance the bottom line at the expense of current human life (as well as animal and plant life, of course), as well as the quality of life for future generations.

Thank you for viewing your role in such a way as to do everything you can to save these magnificent bodies of water.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

Our oceans no longer sustain as much life as they used to. Overfishing, habitat destruction, and poor management have all led to this alarming decline in the health of our oceans.

I remember as a child summering at the Jersey Shore I could actually see the bottom of the ocean floor and the fish swimming. Today my grandchildren are often unable to safely swim in the ocean and a thriving clean ocean is unknown by them. What will the children of tomorrow witness without your intervention?

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Having spent much time along the southern California coastline I have on numerous occasions been warned not to swim in an area or to avoid eating contaminated fish, not to mention the fisherman's problems of finding fish that were once plentiful.

It seems that the current protections are far too weak to be viable. Any reduction in protections would be an obvious cave-in to special interests at the expense of the larger population, the fish and the ecosystem.

I certainly have compassion for the fishermen who are having a difficult time earning a living; but weakening ocean and fish protections is obviously not the solution.

Mother Nature is already wrecking havoc because of global warming with extraordinary winds, flooding, and drought. I continually find it incredible that the Bush administration and their big business cronies apparently don't get the link between the health of the environment and well-being of all life and all human endeavors on Earth. Are they really so stupid to not understand that nothing can prosper on a dying world? I guess that they just want to line their pockets right now, and forget about the very imminent disaster looming on the horizon. They don't care about our future, or even the future of their own children. That makes them truly evil, for all the blabbing they do about God. I have observed that the people who mouth off the most about God, are busy doing the Devil's work. To harm the Earth is to spit in the face of God

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. As I have stated in other letters of support for environmental protection, it is imperative that the U.S. be seen as and act as an environmental leader throughout the world. We are clearly not in the desperate position of many developing countries that almost have no option but to abuse their environment to simply live. It should be beneath us to view our oceans or any other resource as there to be plundered come what may after the destruction is done. Do the right thing, put environmental protection above the interests of financial gains.

Our oceans no longer sustain as much life as they used to. Overfishing, habitat destruction, and poor management have all led to this alarming decline in the health of our oceans. I would like to know that my children and their children will be able to enjoy our beautiful oceans and the magnificent life forms that call our oceans home. Equally importantly, it is critical to maintain the health of our oceans as the source of uncontaminated and disease-free food for human consumption.

Thank you for considering these comments.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

For too long, our oceans have served as both a bottomless food resource and a limitless dumping ground -- rather a contradiction in use but easily understood because "out of sight, out of mind." But we have asked too much and done too much and the damage is now so extreme that it is daily more and more apparent.

As a result, I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Ocean habitats, which include coral, sea grasses, sandy bottoms and rocks, all provide fish with the food, shelter, spawning areas and nursing grounds that are essential to their continued survival. The various habitats that are essential to fish survival are collectively called essential fish habitat.

Note that the key word in the above paragraph is ESSENTIAL!!!

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

It has come to my attention that some of the ocean conservation laws now in effect may be in jeopardy. For the record, I want to add my name to the list of citizens concerned about water quality and ocean habitat.

I am a travel counselor, and I would actively support the additional implementation of more stringent environmental laws in regards to cruise ship and merchant ship wastes, as well as limits on commercial fishing. It is very sad that as a result of improved fishing technologies, and heightened use of chemicals, etc., we are now threatened with numerous fish depletions in our oceans and rivers.

I will appreciate your efforts in doing what you can to keep the water conservation laws that are already in place and to support additional ones that would further our conservational efforts.

Sincerely,
Claudia Machell

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

Under President Bush, America is turning toward special interests and away from citizens and our environment.

How will American history regard this President who undermines The Clean Air Act, The Clean Water Act, The Endangered Speices Act, by rewriting the rules to favor big business?

How will history judge this President who approves the Patriot Act which restricts individual rights and freedoms given by our founding fathers in our constitution?

How will history look upon this President who lead this country to war based on lies and deceit?

The President himself says that history won't matter because "We'll all be dead."

But, he's only half right. He has forgotton about our environment and all the wildlife that shares this earth with us.

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. Everything we do as a country and people seems to be for short term benefit/exploitation. We shortchange future generations with our selfish and reckless misuse of the environment. It is time we take a more responsible approach to preserving the health of our environment. Please help move our country in that direction by acting to protect fish habitat. Thank you.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I have had the opportunity to snorkel in a coral reef. It was wonderful, but damage to the reef was evident. I have followed the plight of the manatees; they need our protection from motor boats. I have read reports on over fishing. Fishing needs to be highly regulated and severely curtailed. I ask that the whales be protected and that Jap[an and other countries that violate the moratorium on killing whales be sanctioned. Please protect the oceans. They are the Earth's lungs.

Recently, our family visited the Monterey California Aquarium. There's a film they show there that you need to see. Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. I sincerely enlist your help and support. My little grandchildren need a whole global ecology in their world, too. The ocean must be protected or the planet will die. Then we're all in a pickle.

Thank you

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

The health of our oceans is threatened again by special interests seeking to weaken habitat protections. The National Marine Fisheries service is asking the public to comment on whether to protect essential fish habitat.

Please make known to the NMF that the public wants life in our waters worldwide. I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines.

Recent reports kshow that the oceans are under attack from land based pollution and overfishing.

We are vegan and buy organic food. We don't eat any fish or animal products and the environmental impact of pesticides and fertilizers would be minimized on our part.

Please take note of the threats to the childrens future and don't let exploitation by a few ruin it for the rest.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

If the US truly wishes to lead the world, then surely we must do so by example.

If the example that we wish to present is one that respects and protects the value of global oceans, then we must do whatever we can to strengthen legal safeguards that ensure the quality of the seas for future generations.

Please do not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. Only strengthening and enforcing those guidelines will offer the productive and constructive example that we would wish others to follow.

Dear Mr. Schmitten,

I urge you to protect our oceans and not weaken existing essential fish habitat guidelines. It seems that under the Bush administration we are losing the hard-won gains of past decades. We cannot afford to go backwards. Once we have destroyed the water environment and its fish, it is impossible to bring it back. Dead is dead. No matter how much our president believes he is being led by God, not even he can believe God will restore our rivers, streams and oceans after he allows industry to destroy them.
